

Student Writing Permission Form

Can We Use Your Writing, Please?

The Business Writing Program at University of Nevada, Las Vegas integrates samples of former student work into the curriculum so that current business writing students can develop effective planning and composing strategies by close examination of actual documents. That former students write these samples helps current students in many ways, among them the recognition of how other students like themselves interpreted the writing projects.

By volunteering the use of your work for the program, you can help future students develop as effective business writers. Remember that all documents exhibit strengths and weaknesses, so we particularly appreciate samples that might not necessarily represent your best work. If that's the case, you may opt to have us use your work, but change your name or contact information. But we will appreciate your contribution nonetheless.

Student Permission Statement

You have my permission to use my writing from this course as examples in writing courses, teaching workshops, professional publications, and textbooks.

Please check one of the following:

You may use my first and last name to identify my work.

You may use my first name only.

You may use my work, but not my name. (If you check this option, the program will either use your work without any name or will make up a name.)

In addition, please check below if you wish identifiable features to be changed:

You may use my work, but please change any identifiable details, such as last names of people.

Signed: _____

Please print your name: _____

Date: _____

Course-Section/Term Year (e.g., 407A-001 Fall 2004): _____

NOTE: Please provide instructor with electronic copies of your work